UTOPIA OF IDENTITY

From May 30th, Friday, at 6.30 pm, the cloisters of the museum Leonardo da Vinci will host the exhibition Utopia of Identity, promoted by the Accademia delle Belle Arti di Brera, Milan.

The Experimental Research Laboratory, organized by professor Pier Luigi Buglioli, presents "Utopia of Identity", an exhibition in progress growing day by day, with works, installations, photographs, videos, appearances and performances of more than 100 young students (under 35) of the Accademia di Belle Arti di Brera.

The project was born in the present climate of suspension, transition and dispersion of the self and the world, from the need to experience "planet man" through new artistic languages, without technical or expressive limitations, in the name of creativity.

The exhibition-happening is a chance for the young researcher to find new creative expressions to investigate faces and masks of contemporary man, more and more exiled from himself.

Intentionality, spontaneity, casualty, transgression show off in works different for techniques and contents, between chronicles and illusions, consent and dissent of performing identities.

Once again the National Museum of Science and Technology becomes a platform of creative expressions connected to contemporary art, in the attempt to create a bridge between apparently different sources of knowledge like science and art, music and technology.
